

Dermaplaning

What is Dermaplaning?

Dermaplaning is an exfoliating treatment done by a trained professional with a surgical blade.

How does Dermaplaning work?

This treatment sloughs off the first couple layers of dry, dead skin cells. The buildup of dead skin and microscopic hairs can make your complexion appear dull, flaky, and can even cause breakouts due to clogged pores and hair follicles. This form of mechanical exfoliation is essential for maintaining an even, healthy glow. Dermaplaning is a great compliment to any facial or chemical peel.

What to know before and after?

Dermaplaning does not cause vellous hair to grow back faster or darker. Vellous hair usually grows back within four weeks. There is no downtime with dermaplaning except mild redness following the treatment. Dermaplaning is recommended for all skin types. This is a great treatment for clients who are pregnant or nursing who want a deep exfoliation, but they are not allowed to use peeling agents on skin.
